CT&D Provides Successful “Writing to Learn” Training During Spring Break Seminar

During the Spring Break Seminar, faculty from the School of Justice, as well as other disciplines, took advantage of the “Writing to Learn” seminar. This seminar is slated to be repeated over the next several years to provide faculty with the opportunity to participate in this training that will assist with the infusion of the various components of the QEP. Additionally, “Writing to Learn” offerings will be provided during the upcoming Fall semester. Although the current training efforts are focused on the School of Justice faculty, QEP-related training provides the opportunity for all MDC faculty to participate. During Fall 2015, additional training for full-time faculty will continue, as well as training opportunities for adjunct faculty and staff. Watch for CT&D announcements for upcoming training opportunities that you can participate in to promote the culture of writing at Miami Dade College.

QEP Writing and Career Support Begins

In conjunction with the Student Achievement Initiative, Community of Interest (COI) Managers have been hired for the School of Justice and the School of Business. These managers include Alexis Cole for the School of Business and Monica Michala for the School of Justice.

To support writing for students, Ildiko Barsony and Caitlin Richardson have been hired as the full-time Writing Coaches for the initial infusion of the QEP into the School of Justice at North and Hialeah campuses. Additionally, six part-time Writing Assistants will also be hired to support the writing process. Individuals providing writing support will be housed in Learning Resources of the respective campuses.

Both the COI managers and Writing Coaches/Assistants will support the faculty and academic administration with the infusion of SAI and QEP components inside and outside of the classroom. Please welcome and support these individuals in their very important role at the College.
